be passed to a mutant with a P loop mutation at 21q22.3. A familial astrocytoma was previously described in which astrocytic neoplasms occurred in a multisystem fashion and which was associated with a point mutation at the same locus as the retinoblastoma susceptibility gene. The characteristic clinical phenotype associated with this locus has been associated with the presence of the retinoblastoma susceptibility gene.

However, when the cytogenetic analysis was extended to include more than 25 individuals in eight additional families, this locus was found to be only weakly linked to the retinoblastoma gene. As the presence of a retinoblastoma susceptibility gene has been linked to chromosome band 13q14 (ref. 13), an association was sought between the new chromosomal abnormality and the other genetic loci. In order to study the chromosomal location of this new genetic locus, a panel of somatic cell hybrids including 13 revertants of chromosome 13 and two segregants from an sibship containing an obligate carrier of d0c515b9f4
